Dear Todd,

As Director of the Rangeview Library District, the possibility of having Google build its high speed network in City of Thornton is a fabulous opportunity. By July 2010, we will have three Anythink libraries in the City of Thornton. Our 25,000 square foot Anythink Huron Street just opened to rave reviews. Our 45,000 square foot anchor Anythink Wright Farms at 120th and Holly is scheduled to open July 10, 2010.

Our customers are delighted with the technology available at our new libraries. To have Google as part of our community would open up fabulous possibilities for partnerships. The stature and sense of innovation that Google brings would be excellent positioning for the City of Thornton.

As you know, the City of Thornton and Rangeview Library District has a very strong working relationship. The support that you have shown the District as we have built our new libraries has developed into a strong partnership, which I assume would be the case as you work with Google.

I strongly support this effort. Having Google as a neighbor is a winning proposal.

Sincerely,

Pam Sandlian Smith

Library Director
